Mount, Injured in Taxicab Fight.

Cab Fight.

New York, August 11.—Mental suggestion by friends is slowly restoring to Harry C. Mount, Standard Oil man, his memory, which was paralyzed when, on July 11, he was struck on the head during a fight in a taxical in Broadway.

After being struck down in the taxi-cab, Mount was unconscious for eight days in St. Vincent's Hospital. Then

State," This act is general in character and not in the least local or special. The State Constitution says the Legislature cannot pass any special acts, only general ones, and this title to the Walsh act is censidered by constitutional lawyers to be strictly general and constitutional.

The Legislature of 1912, however, amended the title to the original act to read as follows: "An act relating to, regulating and providing for the government of cities, towns, boroughs, villages and other municipalities governed by boards of commissioners or improvement commissioners in this commissioners and the may remember it for a short time.

They tried him on all the summer resorts he has visited. It was a long time before he had Brighton Beach or some such name as that at his command when he wanted it. It was learned he still retained his grasp on numbers, so dates and streets came easy to him. But for weeks in which his faithful attendants feared the worst he could drag but one name out of the chaotic past, and that was to regulating and providing for the government of cities, towns, boroughs, villages and other municipalities governed by boards of commissioners or improvement commissioners in this

The treatment is considered unusual from the fact in cases similar to Mount's the surgical operation of trepanning usually is performed.

But so successful is the "mental suggestion" plan surgeons attending Mount say they believe it will result in a complete restoration of his memory.

Mount has an apartment in the Hotel Belleclaire, Seventy-seventh Street and Broadway. There his friends gather daily and try to responsible to the presence of Schmidt. The taxical stopped at Fifth Avenue and Ninth Street, having run out of gasolene.

All got out of the car except Mount. By that time the argument between the Mexican and the New Yorker had reached a heated stage. As Mount started to alight he was hit by one of the party. His head struck the sidewalk. Schmidt was arrested. He now is out on ball under a charge of felonious assault.
